Cloud computing changed the world of Internet. With the help of cloud computing user can easily share, store and retrieve their data from anywhere. Cloud computing is scalable, fast, flexible, and cost-effective technology platform for IT enabled services over the internet. Cloud computing provides hardware, software and infrastructural storage to many users at a time. Most of the times cloud users don't know the exact location of their data or the sources of data stored with their data. In spite of various benefits that are provided by the cloud computing services, its users are very much afraid about the security of their data once it is over the cloud under the control of third-party vendors. Therefore, many data security and integrity concerns like access control, searchable encryption techniques, key management, ownership proofs and remote integrity check arise.

This paper discusses the security and integrity of data in cloud computing. It is a study of aspects related to data security. The paper will go in to details of few data protection methods and approaches used throughout the world to ensure maximum data protection by reducing risks and threats. Going ahead the paper also discuss different techniques used for secured data storage on cloud.

I. INTRODUCTION

Cloud computing is an emerging technology in the field of networking. It is gaining popularity in all areas. The National Institute of Standards and Technology (NIST)[1] defines cloud computing as a model for enabling ubiquitous, convenient, on-demand network access to a shared pool of configurable computing resources. In simple words cloud computing is a computing model in which resources are provided to the users based on their demand. In cloud computing resources are provided by the cloud service provider known as CSP.

Cloud computing is the combination of many pre-existing technologies that have matured at different rates and in different contexts. The goal of cloud computing is to allow users to take benefit from all Cloud computing is gaining a lot of attention, however, security is a major obstacle to its widespread adoption. Users of cloud services are always afraid of data loss, security threats and availability problems. Recently, machine learning-based methods of threat detection are gaining popularity in the literature with the advent of machine learning techniques. Therefore, the study and analysis of threat detection and prevention strategies are a necessity for cloud protection. With the help of the detection of threats, we can determine and inform the normal and inappropriate activities of users. Therefore, there is a need to develop an effective threat detection system using machine learning techniques in the cloud computing environment. In this paper, we present the survey and comparative analysis of the effectiveness of machine learning-based methods for detecting the threat in a cloud computing environment. The performance assessment of these methods is performed using tests performed on the UNSW-NB15 dataset. In this work, we analyse machine learning models that include Support Vector Machine (SVM), Decision Tree (DT), Naive Bayes (NB), Random Forests (RF) and the K-Nearest neighbour (KNN). Additionally, we have used the most important performance indicators, namely, accuracy, precision, recall and F1 score to test the effectiveness of several methods.

1. INTRODUCTION

Recently the use of cloud computing has become increasingly popular. The personalised data centres have become popular as an inexpensive infrastructure solution for business plans. Cloud computing offers a wide variety of resources in the form of Internet services. Cloud computing assists users/organizations in reducing infrastructure costs by providing various online resources. Infrastructure as a service (IaaS), Platform as a service (PaaS) and Software as a service (SaaS) are still widely distributed and used by end-users. In this way, users do not need the knowledge, control and ownership of the cloud computing infrastructure and do not need to manage or control the infrastructure to deploy their applications.
